INDIAN MUSIC LITERATURE

MOHAMMED HAROON
M.A., M.Lib.Inf.Sc.
Librarian
Faculty of Music and Fine Arts
University of Delhi

ISBN 81-15004-28-5 1991 Rs 390

ABOUT THE BOOK

Indian music is one of the oldest systems of the world. Throughout the ages, the education in the fine arts of Indian music was imparted through indigenous way called Guru Shishya Parampara or Gharana system. Upto the mid of the present century this traditional style of music education was prevalent.

After Independence, with so many upheavals in the socio-economic front, the music too faced some favourable changes e.g. formal education system, enhanced social respectability, more public interest and enormous literary activities in the form of research and publications. The introduction of music at school, college and university levels generated the demand for degrees in music and the University Grants Commission by insisting on research degrees for employment and promotion accelerated the research activities.

For the research workers in Indian music, the search for relevant literature is extra hard. Reference works such as encyclopaedias, indexing and abstracting periodicals, discographies, good subject bibliographies and dictionaries are not available.

A lot of literature on Indian music is flowing every year in the form of concert reviews and general articles in newspapers, music journals, general magazines, books and research theses. This flow of information must be organised for fruitful utilization. There was a drastic need for a systematically arranged music bibliography for the music scholars. The present work bridges this gap.

This work covers all the aspects of Indian music—Hindustani music, Karnataka music, instruments and instrumental music, sacred music, semi-classical music, musicology and music education. The information is contained in over 2500 bibliographical entries collected from 150 journals, newspapers, 450 books and about 200 theses accepted in Indian and foreign universities.

PANCHAYATI RAJ IN INDIA

by
B. S. TOMAR

ABOUT THE BOOK

The system of local self-government called the 'Panchayati Raj' has been in existence in India since the Vedic period. But the nebulous concept of panchayats and its practice has undergone changes in sum and substance to correspond with the social needs. Today it bears little resemblance to the local self-governments of the ancient and medieval times. The village panchayats of the old looked after the administration of the functions relating to revenue, judiciary, internal defence, security, public works etc.

In modern times, Mahatma Gandhi pleaded for the promotion of village panchayat to make it the democratic self-governing institution of a village. After independence in 1947, the idea of self-government was enshrined in the Indian Constitution. More and more literature began to appear on Panchayati Raj. Several conferences and seminars have been held in the country from time to time. The latest 14th Conference of the All India Panchayat Parishad, New Delhi was held in June 1990, leaders of various political parties including chief ministers of several states participated. It was unanimously agreed to introduce a bill in the Parliament to amend the Constitution to give legal status to Panchayati Raj.

There exists no comprehensive bibliographic survey on this subject. The idea of bringing out a bibliographic survey on the subject was conceived to fill this void and the end product covers the literature consisting of approximately 4256 items consisting of books, periodical articles, research articles, doctoral theses, newspaper articles/items, conference/seminar proceedings, committees and government reports, unpublished research papers published in India and abroad in English as well as Hindi.

This compilation will serve as an important and invaluable reference source to all those, who are interested in Panchayati Raj in India.
